ABOUT

SISTER ZEPH CEO OF THE ZWEE FOUNDATION

Sister Zeph, the visionary behind the ZWEE Foundation, began her journey at age 13 after leaving school due to humiliation and abuse. With no formal support, she educated herself and started teaching underprivileged girls in her village for free. From one student under the open sky, her dream grew into a movement that has now educated thousands.

In 2023, her efforts were recognized globally when she became the first Pakistani to win the Global Teacher Prize, awarded by the Varkey Foundation. Her story is a beacon of hope, courage, and empowerment for millions around the world.

THE IMPACT OF ZWEE FOUNDATION

For over 27 years, the ZWEE Foundation has been providing free and quality education to underprivileged students. To date, we have educated over 3,000 children free of cost and continue to operate two schools, offering education to more than 300 students at no charge. Our schools emphasize digital skills and IT systems, ensuring that students are equipped for a rapidly advancing and modern future.

Additionally, we place a strong focus on entrepreneurship, preparing students to become innovative thinkers and contributors to society. By instilling a sense of responsibility, we are shaping them into good citizens who take pride in their country, Pakistan, just as Sister Zeph does.

Beyond education, we have empowered over 6,000 women through free skill development programs such as stitching, beauty salon training, computer courses, fashion designing, and self-defense. These programs are vital for helping women achieve financial independence and build confidence, with 200 women benefiting annually from these transformative opportunities.

Moreover, the ZWEE Foundation is deeply committed to youth programs and peace-building initiatives, fostering unity and empowering young individuals to become agents of positive change.

This extraordinary journey is led by Sister Zeph, the Founder and CEO of the ZWEE Foundation, who has dedicated her life to creating a brighter future for countless lives through her unwavering commitment and vision.

Message From The Executive Director

Dear Friends & Supportes

As a 13-year-old girl, I was a dreamer with aspirations of becoming a lawyer like Asma Jahangir from Pakistan. I often dressed up as Benazir Bhutto, our former prime minister. I was an avid debater and writer, focusing on stories that highlighted social issues.

My mother, like many mothers in my country, often reminded me that one day I would get married. However, I couldn't shake the feeling that my purpose in life was greater than marriage. Deep down, I believed there was more to my journey.

I was a sensitive soul, and one particular incident altered the course of my life forever. I left school in the 7th grade and vowed never to return. A deep sense of humiliation haunted me for days. I shut myself away, feeling as if my heart was withering.

One day, I stood on the teacher's chair to address my classmates as if I were the teacher. When my actual teacher discovered this, she berated and humiliated me in front of my peers. Her hurtful words, combined with the mockery of my classmates, left me in tears.

In that moment, I made a life-changing decision to leave school. My dreams seemed to vanish, and my parents urged me to enrol elsewhere, but I refused.

Despite leaving school, I never stopped learning. I began studying independently at home without formal tutoring. Simultaneously, I embarked on a mission to provide girls with the respect and love I had lacked. I started visiting homes in my village, crafting and distributing pamphlets to promote free education. I walked from village to village, tirelessly urging parents to send their daughters to my school, promising to teach them English for free. My mother and I visited homes every Sunday, but no one joined initially.

At just 13, people dismissed my efforts as naïve. Yet, I persevered, determined to spare others from the hardships I had faced. I vowed to create a school without corporal punishment, where learning was engaging and enjoyable.

In the beginning, I had only one student, and we held classes outdoors. Even now, we have no building—our roof is the sky. In summer, we study under the sun; in winter, under blankets; and when it rains, classes pause.

At 16, I completed my matriculation and secured a job as a telecom receptionist. My $15 monthly salary funded school supplies. I later earned a master's degree in Political Science in 2010 and am pursuing another in History, all through self-study.

To date, I have taught around 500 girls. My school now has three programs: the Women Learning Center, which trains 20 students in stitching, embroidery, and soft skills; Formal Education, with 100 students; and an English language course for 15 girls. I also run a beauty salon training center, where 20 girls learn hairdressing and bridal makeup. Next month, I will launch a computer learning center to connect girls globally.

I use my salary to pay competitive wages to staff at Zephaniah Free Education. I also manage the World Wide Women's community page, run my own page, "Zephaniah Free Education," and contribute blogs addressing women's issues. Currently, I am studying journalism and producing community dramas to promote peace, respect for women, and the value of education.

My teams feel like family, and my co-workers provide moral support. Friends on Facebook inspire me to explore new ideas.

In my region, women face lifelong suffering—mental and physical abuse, lack of education, child marriage, and honor killings. Witnessing their plight strengthens my resolve. I believe education and awareness are the keys to change. My vision is a world where every girl is educated, empowered, and protected. I will continue this work for the rest of my life.

With Gratitude
Sister Zeph
